

Go To School with America's Most Listened to Gardening Talk Show Host

Whittier, CA - He technically teaches millions every day with his daily and weekend radio show, but, when Nick Federoff was approached to teach a landscape design class for Sustainable Environmental Education - he jumped at the idea.

“As any teacher can attest to, it’s not about the money.” says Federoff. He continues, “I’ve heard if you want something to get done have a busy person do it. My plate is full with personal appearances, keynote speeches, trade shows and of course, my radio programs. Knowing all of that I still agreed to fire up my credentials and teach again and I’m having a great time!”

As a special treat to the class Federoff will occasionally bring in his mobile studio, a radio engineer then broadcast his syndicated radio gardening show with his ‘in-studio’ audience offering the days curriculum, taking callers questions and fielding questions from his class.

Currently, students that successfully finish the 8 week course receive a ‘Certificate of Completion’ for the course outline. “I’ve been asked to put together a complete ornamental horticulture certificate curriculum which will include continuing education for pest control, arborists, landscape architects, irrigators, landscapers and associated fields.”

Federoff is host of America’s most listened to radio gardening show, Nick Federoff on Gardening and the award winning Things Green Garden Minute. Plus, he also hosts the only audio program for the green industry professional called ‘The Green Industry Talk Show.’
